THE INNOVATION

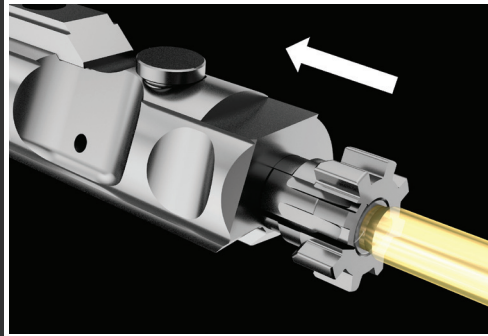

CONTINUES

RADIAL DELAYED BLOWBACK

CMMG's patented Radial Delayed Blowback operating system revolutionized pistol caliber AR's. Unlike typical direct blowback systems, Radial Delayed Blowback uses a bolt that is forced to rotate and unlock before cycling. This delay allows CMMG to use a lighter buffer and carrier than a direct blowback, resulting in less felt recoil than the typical PCC. The benefits of Radial Delayed Blowback are now available in 9mm, 40 S&W, 45 ACP, 5.7x28mm and 10mm.

The bolt starts in battery and is fully rotated. The cartridge going off results in the bolt carrier group being forced rearward. The chamfer on the rear of the bolt lugs contacts the barrel extension, which forces the bolt to rotate out of alignment with the barrel extension while simultaneously accelerating the carrier rearward. This mechanical delay forces more gas down the barrel and allows chamber pressures to drop to optimal levels.

Once the bolt is rotated out of alignment with the barrel extension, the bolt carrier group can cycle like a standard AR-15. The amount of force required to overcome the Radial Delayed Blowback system reduces the amount of weight necessary to maintain safe chamber pressures while reducing bolt velocity. This results in a lighter, softer-recoiling firearm.
